EXECUTIVE BUSINESS NOT

With Notable Exception of British Invasion, This Is the First Time the President and His Staff Have Left Historic Building to Conduct the Affairs of the Nation.

The Republic Bureau. 14th St. and Pennsylvania Ave. Washington, July 12.-For the first time, with one exception, since President John Adams entered it over a century ago, all executive business is being conducted outside of the White House.

On occasions almost without number Presidents and their families have been absent from the executive mansion for various lengths of time, but, with the notable exception of the British invasion of the capital, the occupancy of the house in Jackson place by President Rossevelt and the Tentire executive force is the first instance where no part of the administrative machinery was in operation in the presidential esidence since its establishment

The nearest approach to the present condition was during the first few months of the administration of President Chester A. Arthur. Following his induction into office on the death of the assassinated Garfield in the fall of 1881 and until January 1, 1882, when Arthur held his first public reception In the White House, General Arthur made his home at the residence of Senator Jones his home at the residence of Senator Jones of Nevada. This residence is perhaps better known as the Ben Butler house, from the fact that it had been built and owned by the stateman from Massachusetts. With the President in the Jones home were his private secretary and a small office force, and it was here that his first message to Congress was written. At the White House, however, not an inconsiderable amount of afficial husiness was transpacted, the late Major O. L. Pruden being, as executive clerk, practically in charge of the official force there.

This work was begun shortly before the shooting of President Garnald, and was carried forward during the summer and fall. With General Garfield at Elberon during the months subsequent to the shooting was his private secretary, J. Stanley Brown, but the remainder of the force was at work in the executive manadon.

President Haves occupied for a time a house near the Soldiers' Home, and Presi-dent Cleveland spent much time at "Red Top" and at Buzzard's Bay, but the ex-ecutive machinery remained in each case in the presidential residence.

States from the official home of the chief executive was the subject of one presidential message to Congress. Near the close of the second term of General Grant as President the matter of his frequent absences from the White House was brought up in the House of Representatives and developed heated discussions. The great chieffain, who, as he the Civil War, never tested until he had seen the matter, whatever it was, settled, at once had prepared a message which showed, from the beginning of the National Government, the respective absences and the duration thereof of Presidents from the seat of government, and by the list it was shown that in the number and in the aggregate length of time away from the White House, and it was ther from the White House, and it was ther me away from the White of's had been exceeded by a ils predecessors. The Taylee manaton, better known as "The Octagon," because of its peculiar shape, at the cotner of Eighteenth street and New York avenue, and later, the house at the northwest corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Nineteenth street were seats of the administration function of the Government following the burning of the White House in 1814, the executive mansion being repaired only in time for the entrance of Mr. Monroe, who succeeded President Madison March 4, 1817.

Burning of White House.

Burning of White House.

The burning of the White House by the Eritish took place on the night of August 21, 1814. The battle of Bladensburg had been fought, and the American forces, largely made up of raw militiamen, and pitted against 1,000 marines and 3,500 vetons who had seen rervice under Wellington, had suffered repulse and fallen back on Tennallytown. Flushed with victory, the Eritish entered Washington, and in the White House, one historian states, they found a table set for forty guests, in expectation of the victorious return of the defenders of the city. This, however, is not borne out by facts and by the letters Burning of White House.

of Dolly Madison of that time and of that very day. These letters show that she and Mr. Madison, who was at filadensburg during the first half of the battle, were fearful of the outcome. The soldlers found food and drink there in quantity, however, and after regailing themselves and pillaging the mansion the torch was applied. Unly the walls were left standing.

The battle of Bladensburg, where the American troops had hurried to meet the British, under General Ross and Admiral Cockburn, began at 1 o'clock and ended at 4. The British entered Washington about 8 p. m. In addition to the burning of the White House and the Capitol, including the Congressional Library, the Treasury, the State. President's Family Crossed Potomac.

President's Family Crossed retomac-For several days before the advent of the British carts loaded with public documents and private property were streaming across Long Bridge mto Virginia, the English in the meantime having salled up the Patux-ent River and landed at Benedict, thirty miles from Washington. The movement of ent River and landed at Benedict, thirty miles from Washington. The movement of valuables began on Simday, and was continued Monday and Tuesday, the day of the battle, and the entry of the invaders. Mrs. Madison remained at the White House until the afternoon of the 3th, when about 3 o'clock, James Smith, a colored servant, came riding in from Bladensburgs calling out: "Clear out, clear out. General Armstrong has ordered a retreat." The day before, Mrs. Madison had received a note fram the President to be ready to enter her carriage at a moment's notice and leave the city. One carriage nad been filled with official documents, and now, getting into her own and accompanied by two servants, she was driven rapidly to Georgetown Heights. With her she took the family plate and a painting of Washington, which was hastily torn from its frame.

The President and the members of his Cabinet, all of whom had left Bladensburg before the conclusion of the battle, on hearing of the disastrous result crossed the Potomac into Virginia at Little Falls, recrossing it at the Great Palls. Mrs. Madison spent the night of the 24th at Mrs. Lowe's, two miles beyond the Potomac. The next night she stopped at Mrs. Minor's, a few miles farther on.

During the reveral days spent away from Washington, Mrs. Madison was joined by the President. Their reception at several places during their flight was in a number of caves far from hospitable, and some of their experiences were most unpleasant, One night was spent in a hut in a wood, and they were drenched in two rainstorms. they were drenched in two rainstorms.

British Burn Property.

The British stayed but twenty-four hours in Washington, leaving on the night of the 25th. During that day much property was burned and otherwise destroyed by them. Having applied a torch to numerous buildings, it was thrown by the British into a dry well, in which the Americans had previously thrown large quantities of gunpowder and other military stores. In the explosion which followed, nearly 100 British were killed and wounded. On the beels of this came a tornado, such as Washington has never known before or since. Great damage was done. It is not unlikely that the explosion and the tornado had much to do with the British retreat, the disasters serving to prey upon their superstitious fears.

With the departure of the enemy, Mrs. Madison and the President and members of his Cabinet returned to the city. Mrs. Madison went to the home of her sister, Mrs. Cutts.

The Tayloe house was then rented, and the executive office again established. Here President and Mrs. Madison lived about a year, afterwards removing to the house at the northwest corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Nineteenth street, which had previously been occupied by the Treasury Department.

President Signs Treaty of Peace.

President Signs Treaty of Peace.

It was to "The Octagon" that the news of neace came six months after the flight from the White House, and it was there that the treaty of Ghent was considered by the President and his Cabinet, and signed on December 34, 1814. The treaty was ratified by the Senate February 18, 1815. During the occupancy of the building as the presidential residence, some of the most brilliant of state functions of those times were held.

The wanton destruction of the White House, the Capitol and other public buildings was before two weeks had passed avenged by the death of the British commanding General, the repulse of the English troops at Baltimore; their defeat at Plaitsburg, and the surrender of their fleet on Lake Champiain. To the credit of the English, it may be said that the outrage was stigmatized in Parliament "as an enterprise, of all recorded in all the annais of war which most exasperated the people and least weakened the Government."

The corner stone of the White House was laid October 13, 1732, and when occupied by President John Adams upon his arrival in the capital. November 1, 1820, was not quite completed. It was modeled after the palace of the Duke of Leinster, and after the fire was rebuilt upon plans furnished by Captain Hoban, the architect of the original building.

This selection of an English-born and English-speaking Pontiff would yield to the Erglish-speaking Pontiff would yield to the church both here and in greater Britain an incalculable access of prestige, and give to her various activities an immense impetus. To bring back to the fold the English "sejarated brethren" has been the darling wish of the "Mother Church" and the plous aspiration of every Pope since the Reformation days. A long step will have been taken to the desired goal by the elevation of an Englishman to the popedom. These considerations will not have been lost sight of by the assute politicians of the Vatican, some of whom are conceded to be second to none among the diplomats of the day.

Wholly without enemies, a deep thinker, an accomplished scholar, with the gift of speaker, his reign would add a luster to the church. His presence is strikingly handsome and imposing—earning for olm the description, "the handsomest man in London"—and he would make a regally impressive poniff.

The Cardinal is a militant ecclesiastic of the finest type. Masterfully strong, with the strength born of unfaltering conviction and of that ability that will out, he is withal gentle with the graclous gentleness of the strong, and his courtly court sy is unfalling. Possessed of a remarkable talent for organization, he is a striking contrast to his predecessor, the late Cardinal Manning, who was more attracted by jublic affairs and social questions than by the administration of the Archdiocese of Westminster.

Manning was of an easy-going disposition, while his successor is an incessant worker, full of restless energy and painstaking almost to a fault. Vaughan, like all born organizers, has surrounded himself with a bodyguard of clever, streamous men who serve him with rare fidelity. Believed That Selection of an English Born Pontiff Would Yield Great Access of Prestige.

SPECIAL BY CABLE. London, July 12.-- A prominent British Catholic layman, who recently returned from a lengthy visit to the Vatican, declares that Cardinal John Vaughan, Archbishop of Westminster-who is known to be one of the Pope's favorites, and a perona grata to his fellow Cardinals-may be regarded as one of the "strongest possibilities" for the succession to St. Peter's chair,

The announcement, coming from the source that it does, is of significance, as it has hitherto been considered inevitable that the Italians, who preponderate in the College of Cardinals, should once more exclude foreigners and select one of their own number to be the next wearer of the papal crown. But it is stated, and with some show of authority, that a majority of the Italians are favorable to the placing of the papal crown on the head of an Englishman when the present aged "prisoner of the Vatican" shall have laid it askie forever.

To the world-dominance of the Anglo-Saxon race is due the departure from conservatism of the Italian members of the famous "seventy."
